

SYRIA

War continues to hit and devastate Syria. Severe economic instability has led to an increase in child labor, child marriages and domestic violence. Fewer and fewer children are able to attend school and malnutrition among mothers and children is on the rise.

THE SCHOOL OF MA'AN “STILL I RISE”

“Still I Rise” is a non-profit organization founded in 2018 and which aims to offer education, safety and protection to refugees, disadvantaged and orphaned children in the hottest areas of global migration.

Need You Onlus is proud to be able to collaborate with this association with which we share the same values of integrity and seriousness. Our shared mission is to protect the physical and mental health of children in developing and war-torn Countries. Being able to receive an education is what allows children to change their lives: they can be independent and integrate into society.

We have been committed for years to ensure that the children of the communities we work with can have an education and the collaboration with “Sill I Rise” fully reflects our philosophy.

Still I Rise opened the "Ma'an" center in Al-Dana: every day 32 children attend school, receive food and protection. Children learn English, Arabic, mathematics and are psychologically supported. We help the organization with the management cost of the center. In addition to running the school, the association distributes food parcels to the children's families so that they are not forced to make the children work in order to survive.

In Syria, more than 300 schools have been closed, impacting 117,000 children and 5,000 teachers. Al Dana hosts 840,000 displaced people, of whom 58% are children.
